Dermatopathology is both exciting and exasperating. The stratum corneum is composed of keratinized cells. This occurs in disorders of keratinization. Skin has an elegant simplicity in its functions yet a tremendous complexity because the process of desquamation is disturbed (Figure 1. 1). The tremendous complexity in its structure. This is one of the paradoxes that underlie the pathology of skin disease. Parakeratosis. The presence of nucleated horn cells in and may go some way in explaining the multilaminar stratum corneum. Normally the horn cells (keratinocytes) to which the skin is subject. The readily visible lamellae are thin lamellae of less than 1 μ m thickness. They may also help explain why straightforward histological examination cannot always provide an answer to a clinician's question. Quite dramatic appear the process of keratinization is disturbed such as when the rate of epidermal cell production is increased (as in psoriasis) so that nuclei are not broken down before the stratum corneum is reached and when damage occurs horizontally, neither of which may result in to the upper epidermis (Figure 1. 2). 'much to see' histologically. The inherent sampling error in parakeratosis.
