Making Up Recipe Book: 101 ways to say "I'm Sorry!" Melissa Campbell

A quote I read the other day said, "A great friend is hard to find, difficult to leave and impossible to forget". How true that is! Since food has always been such an important part of our lives, what better way to say, "I'm sorry," than a hearty meal with a wide variety of flavors and textures, a meal that yells, "I care for you and I'm not going to lose our friendship"? After all, home cooking is a way of showing love and affection for the people you are cooking for and your friend will surely appreciate a meal like this. The 101 recipes included in this book are not only amazingly delicious, but also quite easy to make. You don't need to be an expert in the kitchen to prepare them, but you do need to have the determination of someone looking for their friend's forgiveness, something which I'm sure you have. So, pick the recipes you're going to use to apologize, put that apron on, arm yourself with love, and get cooking the best meal your friend will ever have. Ensure that your friend feels spoiled and loved and show how regretful you are. You're one step closer to forgiveness!
