Zulu Vampire Mr Pat Stevens

Captain Jake Smit loved the Zulu, but he hated the superstition that permeated their society, as a police captain he saw the worst of the witchcraft murders and barbaric rituals. Now he had to deal with an outbreak of killing that had brought the volatile Zulu to the boil, because the slaughter was reputed to be the work of the dreaded Impundulu, a legendary Lightning Bird that struck lightning off its talons and fed off human blood. Jake Smit was an Afrikaner who'd been brought up amongst the Zulu, he spoke Zulu fluently and was an authority on Zulu customs and traditions, which was the reason that in the new South Africa the commander of Umuzi Police was a white Afrikaner. Captain Jake Smit owed the Zulu a great debt of gratitude, and he would repay them by tracking down the killers, who had wrought havoc in the entire Umuzi district. First he would have to deal with the lanky Texan, who stirred the story in the local newspaper, Captain Jake Smit looked forward to reasoning with her because Marlin Madison was a beautiful woman. She was also an exceptionally talented journalist, and her coverage of the Lightning Bird had garnered widespread interest, but she never suspected that behind the killings lay an evil greater than Marlin or Jake imagined.
