The Castle Franz Kafka

Franz Kafka was born in Prague in 1883. He suffered all his life from severe feelings of inadequacy and self-doubt, the result of an unhappy childhood with his domineering father. Despite taking a degree in law, Kafka saw himself fated to become a writer. Ordinary events that turn, inexplicably, into walking nightmares-these are the "Kafkaesque" experiences so originally and unforgettably brought to life in the Castle. A stubborn, if unimaginative, land surveyor only referred to as "K" believes he has been hired by a nobleman ("Count Westwest") of a remote district. Yet the surveyor is stymied in all his attempts to meet or speak to his employer, find his dwelling, or learn what the job is supposed to be. The local townspeople show concern, but they are strangely, ominously secretive. Though there are hardly any signs of the count's even being alive, his influence seems to enthrall the entire village. The Castle may impress us as a satirizing our bureaucratic society. However, the novel also suggests that a supernatural agent is responsible for this confusion-a theme that continues to provoke critical and public controversy.
