Lucky Luciano

"There's no such thing as good money or bad money. There's just money."

If the United States underworld had a king, it would have been Lucky Luciano. The Mafia had a special title for the head of a family who was the most powerful among all other heads, capo di tutti capi. When translated, it means the boss of all bosses. Lucky never took on the title but everyone knew that the title was truly his.

This book is part 4 of a series that are about the lives of other legendary US gangsters. Look for other biographies of Lucky Luciano's peers such as Al Capone Bonnie and Clyde and John Dillinger.

Lucky Luciano was the quintessential American gangster. He had the thick Italian accent, the sinister look on his face, the unbridled spending of his wealth on clothes, penthouses and parties that was the stereotype of most mob bosses of his time. At best his loyalty was temporary and he casually shifted alliances when the situation called for it or when it was in his best interest.

His greatest achievement though was not the immense wealth that he has amassed or the crimes he had committed. Instead he is credited to have been the founding father of the Commission. It was the legendary governing body of New York's most powerful families. Lucky Luciano was not only among those five mob bosses but also he was the greatest among all of them.

This book will tell you about:

- The start of Lucky, from his early life to his first modus operandi
- His apprenticeship during America's tumultuous times of the Prohibition
- His loyalties and betrayals
- His rise in power and the formation of the Commission
- The wrong decision that hunted him for the rest of his life
- The life in exile, his failed return to power and his final years
