If not us, then who? takes place in a fictitious east coast town called Montrose and chronicles the life of James Zaponi from his first day of eighth grade through the end of middle school. The book is largely about the progressive independence and responsibility that all young teens need to develop. Zap learns about the true meaning of friendship, experiences romance for the first time, and deals with the anxiety of having an Army sister in war-ravaged Iraq. With friends, enemies, sports, music, girls, and his first job, James Zaponi has his hands full. Learning as he goes, Zap does his best to navigate the daily difficulties of teenage life. Throughout the book, he has new adventures and makes new mistakes but he'll figure it all out in time. If not us, then who? is a balanced story with plenty of excitement, conflict, romance, fear, and humor. I feel young adult readers will relate to the characters and the characters' experiences while, most importantly, enjoying the story.
