Tired, hungry, and sore, William continues to place one foot in front of the other. He's drawn by some unknown force; compelled to keep moving, until he meets a girl among the Hillmen of the White Mountains. Could she be the one he was drawn to?

Anita has a 'gift' as she calls it. She can communicate with animals. William has a secret of his own, though he's never thought of his ability to sense and manipulate the elements as a gift. It's always been more of a curse.

William finds a home with Anita and her family, and they discover that only together are their lives complete. They're obviously meant to be together, and their gifts must have a purpose. After sharing a vision of a golden dragon, William and Anita set out on a quest that will take them far from home.

Could William's psychic bond with Anita really be the answer to finding the dragons? Can they really exist? The golden dragon from their dream charged them with saving the dragons, but from what?
